Focalors is the divine figure known as the Hydro Archon (Divine), while Furina serves as her human counterpart and Fontaine's archon. Understanding their roles and appearance in-game. In the depths of Fontaine, a complex tale unfolds involving Egeria, Focalors, and Furina. Four slates depict pivotal moments: Egeria seeking forgiveness from the heavens; the people of Fontaine attempting to save the Hydro Archon at court; Furina weeping as everyone transforms back into oceanids due to the Primordial Sea's power; and the All-Devouring Narwhal, the source of this catastrophe. Focalors was Egeria's chosen successor but took on a new form after separating her body and spirit to create Furina. This separation left Focalors with memories while Furina remained oblivious. Focalors desired humanity and saw Furina as her ideal human self. With the aim of deceiving the Heavenly Principles, Focalors devised a plan involving Furina's role in the prophecy. She invited Furina to play the Hydro Archon and cast a curse on herself, ensuring she would never die or attain happiness until the prophecy was fulfilled. This ruse fooled the heavens into believing an active Archon was present in Fontaine. The real purpose of this scheme was for Furina's trial to activate the execution of Focalors, thus destroying the Divine Seat of Hydro created by Celestia and returning power to Neuvillette as the Hydro Dragon Sovereign. This shift led Neuvillette to change the Primordial Seawater in Fontainians' veins into real blood, turning them into humans. The flood that ensued receded, and the people survived. Furina did not die; it was Focalors who died after fulfilling her divine role. With the reign over Hydro returned to Neuvillette, Furina could finally become the human she had always wanted. She surrendered her responsibilities as a leader and began living a human life, including acting in a theatre troupe's final musical play. This marked the beginning of Furina's story quest, where she encounters challenges but eventually gains a Hydro Vision. When Focalors passed away, she entrusted Neuvillette with the Hydro Gnosis. Later, when Neuvillette met Skirk, he revealed that the Gnosis was actually the remains of the Third Descender, foretelling misfortune for its carrier. Consequently, Neuvillette handed it over to Arlecchino. Interestingly, Furina never possessed the Hydro Gnosis; it remained in Neuvillette's care throughout the narrative. This complex web of characters and events came to light primarily during Chapter 3 Act 5 - Akasha Pulses, the Kalpa Flame Rises Archon Quest. Furina's position as Hydro Archon remains clear in Genshin Impact lore. Official recognition and game events confirm her role. Despite some complexities surrounding Fontaine, Furina's status as Hydro Archon is not up for debate, especially with the upcoming playable character release in version 4.2. The history of Egeria, Focalors, and Furina provides context to understand Furina's position within the Hydro Archon lineage. While Focalors' power disparity has sparked speculation, official lore confirms she and Furina are different personas of the current Hydro Archon. Debunking theories such as Furina being a puppet reveals that her crucial role in Fontaine aligns with her being the true Hydro Archon. The Hydro Archon identity remains shrouded in mystery, with theories pointing to Furina's true position. The concept of justice plays a central role in Fontaine, and regardless of Furina's authenticity, her actions shape the lives of its inhabitants. A complex web of speculation surrounds the Hydro Archon's identity, but evidence suggests that Furina is indeed the genuine article. As Genshin Impact evolves, it remains to be seen whether new revelations will alter this understanding. The story of Fontaine revolves around Egeria, who dissipated her power into the Amrita pool after her death, making a return highly unlikely. Despite this, Furina's influence continues to shape the lives of those in Fontaine, with her pursuit of justice at the forefront.
